When you recognize you are never going to get the ingénue roles – and that acting career is going to have to wait a few decades – what can you do to earn a living that keeps you connected to the art forms you love? Sometimes, a path clearly presents itself. Other times, you don't see the path for what it is until you've changed directions... yet again! 'Making art' doesn't always happen via the avenues you expect to travel. Then again, isn't that often when the best stuff happens? After all, "Life isn't about finding yourself. Life is about creating yourself." — G Bernard Shaw

Firmly believing if you can't find it, create it, Lyn guides projects with an eye to finding the best resolution for all. By turns creative and cognitive, after seven seasons as Shaw Festival's Audience Services Director, her pivot into independent consulting interlaced with services as Regional Advisor for the Ministries of Citizenship, Immigration, Seniors, Women, Heritage, Tourism, Sport and Culture Industries where colleagues pronounced her "...best plug and play person..." Recently working with ArtworxTO: Toronto's Year of Public Art 2021 and Lighthouse Theatre's accessibility and expansion initiatives, Lyn is an Executive-in-Residence with Capacity Canada. A skilled teacher and facilitator, 1:1 arts mentorships are a favorite undertaking, with such feedback as "You taught me stuff when I wasn't looking!" considered amongst her greatest achievements.
